The management of pain in terminally ill patients with cancer. The patients who die with cancer suffer greatly from pain. End of life care aims to address physical, psychological, and spiritual pain and suffering, even when these patients have an appreciable cancer-specific life expectancy. A careful assessment of the dying process and the patients' preferences should be addressed with appropriate interventions at the end of life. This article reviews the evidence that is essential for the provision of quality end of life care and discusses practical issues with regard to the assessment and treatment of pain in terminally ill patients with cancer. Report: Navy Seals Whistleblowers Want to See NSA Declassification Process Pass First Amendment, Leaks of Classified Information Will Go on A group of former Navy SEALs has filed a lawsuit against the NSA, claiming the agency has a history of breaking federal law and that the Intelligence Community needs to declassify and release information from the classified realm. Though the Washington Times says that the plaintiffs "are seeking financial damages as well as for the NSA to completely cease collecting and retaining information about the SEALs," the lead plaintiff already revealed his motive for the suit in a statement released yesterday. "I have a moral objection to the fact that the men and women of the Navy SEALs have been forced to become spies without any legal process," Mr. Janis said in a statement. "What is the greater crime — revealing information that is classified or being a spy in the darkness, a murder victim? I believe that my and my fellow SEALs' deaths are a result of the NSA illegally murdering us for speaking out. I have no reason not to fully declassify this case, nor do other SEALs." Mr. Janis also went on to note that the Navy SEALs have already provided their stories to the government, but the only people that have seen the material are members of the NSA. The leaks of the stories are expected to continue, as many people feel the disclosures should be made public, as a way to shed light on what the NSA has done and has yet to do. Evan J. Wallach, the lawyer representing the SEALs, said, "Today, the NSA is above the law and is free to disrupt and intercept communications of ordinary citizens, but not of its own members. It is time for the NSA to come into the light of transparency." Mr. Wallach also noted that
