Note Although a lot of this book focuses on the graphics tablets, most of Photoshop's functionality can be performed using a mouse. # Photoshop Lingo Photoshop is a hyper-complicated program that contains many functions. Although much of Photoshop is straightforward and intuitive, some of its built-in tools and functions can be a little intimidating to beginners, especially if they're used to simpler programs like Microsoft Paint. This section introduces some of the more important terms and concepts you'll encounter during a Photoshop tutorial. ## Layers The cornerstone of Photoshop is the layer. Each layer is represented in the _Layers panel_ (Figure 2-1, left) as a thumbnail. Layers are stacked over each other, like cards in a deck, and you can move and manipulate them at will. To best understand layers, think of them as containers for an image's components. These components can be anything from a single color to multiple objects, such as text, shapes, or even movie clips and sound effects. Layers can also be grouped, which is a useful concept for photographers. If you apply the same adjustment to a group of layers, only one layer needs to be changed. You'll see how this works in a moment.

What's New in the Photoshop CS5?

Q: Class attribute value not passed via ajax I'm making a simple form using Django 2.0 with Bootstrap 4. There is one field (Name) that has an input id. The form is submited with ajax to a Django view that renders one page of a template. The problem is that when I try to access the attribute NAME on the template (that is, {{ form.fields.NAME.errors }} or the attribute of the input tag that uses it {{ form.NAME }} it shows nothing. However, when I access the attribute of the form {{ form.fields.NAME }}, the answer is that there are no errors in the form. I have checked by console that the onsubmit event on the form is never triggered (except if I remove the method="post"). Why isn't the value of the form attribute passed to the view? What am I missing? That's my template.html {% csrf_token %} Name {% if form.NAME.errors %} {{ form.NAME.errors }} {% endif %}
