when the husband and wife had the physical relationship in the living room and the complainant was asleep in bedroom, the marriage should have been dissolved and accused committed the offence of adultery. for this the court said that the marriage was dissolved and the offences of adultery and adultery by husband are compounded and the accused was sentenced. any person who is of a hindu, sikh, jain or buddhist religion or who has adopted hindu or buddhist rituals or has changed his or her religion to any of its forms as set forth in the hindu marriage act, 1955 is entitled to maintenance. an eligible son (infant) or an eligible daughter (infant), is entitled to a fair maintenance. in the order determining the maintenance, special care should be taken to ensure that the maintenance amount is not less than a fair maintenance. in case of an unmarried or widowed daughter the amount of maintenance should be the reasonable income of the father of such unmarried or widowed daughter. the order of maintenance may be revised from time to time and it is not bound by the order passed in respect of maintenance for any earlier period of time. considering the goal of the gtx consortium is to characterize the transcriptome of multiple tissues and cell types, we also compared the lead variants to a cohort of individuals with myocardial infarction (n = 343). to evaluate whether variants were associated with risk of infection, we tested the lead variants against a cohort of healthy controls (n = 3,798) (supplementary table 5). we carried out allelic, genotypic and hardy weinberg equilibrium tests to evaluate allele frequency differences between cases and controls. we applied a permutation-based approach to assess whether the associations of the lead variants were inflated by sample relatedness (supplementary table 5). the final set of snps that passed our criteria are based on the results of this evaluation and are the lead variants in each of the 13 loci listed in supplementary table 2 and further results.
